Transportation Options for People Living with Brain Injury in New Jersey

The following transportation programs were designed to assist people with disabilities.

Public transportation in New Jersey for people with disabilities is a challenge; for people with brain injury, it can be an even greater challenge. A person with cognitive disabilities who does not have apparent physical disabilities may encounter barriers in obtaining transportation due to a lack of understanding of brain injury. It is important to remember that when you contact any of the resources below, they may not be aware of, or knowledgeable about, brain injury. Before contacting any of the following resources, you may want to be prepared to provide more detailed information about your disability.

Access Link

Access Link is a curb-to-curb service provided by NJT for people with disabilities. The origin and destination of your trip must be within three-quarters of a mile on either side of a local bus route. Access Link operates during the same days and hours as the local bus routes and may be a good resource if:

- You need assistance getting on or off a bus, or if you cannot ride on an accessible bus without assistance.
- You cannot get to or from a bus stop or subway station
- You could use an accessible vehicle, but accessible service is not available

Fares for Access Link are the same as the fares for the local bus route, and exact fare is required. There are no reduced fares for Access Link. Part of the application process for Access Link includes an interview by Access Link staff. For more information about Access Link, call (800) 955-2321 or TTY (800) 955-6765.
